All the World's a Stage...,

To a pensive mind, life's drama is "all sound and fury signifying nothing. To a man of action, resting on one's laurels means resting of talents; corrosion of capabilities and the world remains a stage with its own parameters and paradigms.

It was our rehearsal for our School Annual day in September 2017. It often seemed like it was the fun that pulled us along through the long hours of preparations for the Annual Day. We must always be punctual to rehearsals and always make sure preserve a good, consistent attendance throughout the rehearsal process. Positive feedback, support from peers and constructive criticism are invaluable, as when they are accepted they can help in shaping and adapting to a performance. This is important so that the optimum amount of practice can be undertaken, which means that the final performance will be as fluent and sustained as possible.

For in its magic, we knew that many special experiences were in store – both with drama and with dramatists; and with music and musicians. And on a deeper level, perhaps we knew that as actors we would work hard to liberate the meanings and messages of playwrights, so that drama could do what it is meant to do – to unify all people across all time and all space, in laughter and in sorrow – and in so doing, to make us all more complete as human beings.

A well-performed role howsoever small is well appreciated by the audience.
